Topic: Novus Law LLC Co-Founders Named Fellows of the College of Law Practice Management

Chicago, Illinois (October 30, 2017) – Novus Law LLC is pleased to announce that firm Co-Founders Raymond Bayley and Lois Haubold were inducted as Fellows of the College of Law Practice Management (COLPM) at the 2017 Futures Conference in Atlanta, Georgia, on October 27.

Nominated by their peers and elected by the College Board of Trustees, COLPM Fellows are distinguished law practice management professionals who represent law firms, educational institutions, professional associations and other organizations that contribute to excellence in law practice management. Mr. Bayley and Ms. Haubold join an elite class of law practice management specialists who exemplify the highest professional standards and achievements. They consistently maintain a significant role in evolving the legal profession.

“Ray and Lois’ commitment to remaking the process to examine, organize and analyze documents and other case-related materials for litigation, investigations and other document-intensive matters is unprecedented in the legal industry,” said Patrick Lamb, COLPM Trustee and co-founder of Valorem Law Group.

“For more than a decade, Novus Law has applied proven business practices, including structured process control and quantitative analytics, to transform unstructured data into useful information for clients and their law firms,” Lamb said. “Their commitment to accuracy, efficiency and cost reduction is supported by dual world-class global certifications in process and security – a characteristic solely unique to Novus Law – in an era of exponential growth of electronically stored information and rising costs.”

The co-founders’ dedication to the future of the legal profession extends beyond the impact of Novus Law’s award-winning work. Mr. Bayley, Novus Law CEO and President, is a champion of innovation, process improvement and quantitative analytics and is a prolific thought-leader committed to engaging the profession through teaching, professional associations and legal publications. Ms. Haubold, Novus Law Executive Vice President, has been honored for her noteworthy contributions to teaching and professional associations, especially her outstanding efforts in leadership, globalization and information security and mentoring and promoting women and minority leaders in the legal profession.

“We’re honored to be invited by the College Trustees to join an esteemed class of COLPM Fellows elevating the legal profession to the highest standards,” said Mr. Bayley and Ms. Haubold.

Novus Law was also recently named a COLPM 2017 InnovAction Award winner for the development and implementation of Novus Accelerate™, the cutting-edge early case assessment solution. The firm previously won an InnovAction Award in 2008 for The Novus Process™, making them the first non-law firm to receive this prestigious award, and only the second honoree to receive this award twice in the program’s 13-year history. Mr. Bayley and Ms. Haubold accepted this prestigious award in conjunction with the Fellows induction ceremony at last week’s Futures Conference.
